Florence La Badie: Silent Film Star and Presidential Courtesan?

By Ned Thanhouser with Bryan Smith

Video Introduction:

Florence La Badie was one of the most important and popular actresses of the early motion picture era. She appeared in over 166 silent films from 1911 through 1917 for the Thanhouser studio in New Rochelle, New York. A daredevil at heart, she was known as “Fearless Flo” for taking risks and performed many of her own stunts. She was a frequent subject for articles and letters in fan and trade magazines, and over a period of years, she was the most publicized and beloved of all Thanhouser players.

“Of all the various winning presences on screen in Thanhouser films, I think my favorite has to be Florence La Badie whose winning grace and gamine energy in Cinderella, and whose elegance of deportment and beautiful natural smile in Dr. Jekyll & Mr. Hyde, and whose commitment and resolution to see justice done in the Evidence of the Film where she rescues her little brother who had been wrongly indicted for a crime he didn’t commit, and then whose plucky energy and impish fun on camera in Petticoat Camp really testify to the very, very natural star that she was.”

– Judith Buchanan, Professor of English and Related Literature, University of York (2013)

Tragically, on October 13, 1917 at age 29, Florence succumbed to injuries suffered in an automobile accident, making her the first major “movie star” to die at the zenith of her popularity. She was buried in an unmarked grave in the Green-Wood Cemetery in Brooklyn, New York. Almost 100 years have passed since her untimely death, but her popularity is experiencing a revival; a Google search yields numerous articles, blogs, and videos published in the past several years about Florence.

Circumstances surrounding La Badie’s life and death, however, remain shrouded in mystery and intrigue.

In his book Stardust and Shadows: Canadians in Early Hollywood, author Charles Foster posits that besides being the most durable and popular star for the Thanhouser studio, Florence La Badie was impregnated by President Woodrow Wilson during a 1914 Christmas holiday visit to the White House in Washington, DC, and subsequently gave birth to his illegitimate child. Furthermore, Foster suggests that the brakes on the car she crashed on August 28, 1917 were sabotaged by government agents to keep her affair with Wilson out of the public eye.¹

Charles Foster’s Myth

But when Florence La Badie died mysteriously at the age of twenty-four, six months after a “car accident” from which everyone thought she had recovered, the movie industry closed ranks and had few, if any, comments to make about the incident. Newspapers – despite being provided with information that her death was worthy of investigation – never printed a word to dispute the official report that said her fatal car accident was just that, an accident.²

Foster’s account of Florence’s birth, supposed affair with Wilson, birth of his illegitimate child, and the circumstances surrounding her death are fraught with factual errors fueled by hearsay and rumor. This paper will address Florence’s birth, career, and her death to analyze Foster’s story. By examining surviving documents, accounts of her career, and the circumstances surrounding her death, our hope is to set the record straight since the inconsistencies and factual errors in Foster’s chapter have been propagated and amplified on the internet via various web sites and blogs (see Appendix 3 for links to various websites and blogs).

Her Birth

Multiple sources (including Charles’ Foster’s book, The Legion of Decency blog³, and Florence’s Wikipedia entry⁴) contain factual errors regarding Florence’s birth date, location, and parentage. It is irrefutable that Florence La Badie was born Florence Russ on April 27, 1888 to Horace B. and Marie C. Russ in New York City. After the death of her father and the inability of her mother to provide care, Florence, at age three, was adopted by Joseph E. and Amanda J. La Badie of Montreal, Canada. This is verified by surviving documents, including:

1) Florence’s CERTIFICATE OF ADOPTION, signed by Robert M. Reaves, Clerk of the Surrogate’s Court of New York on May 4, 1993 confirming her date of birth was April 27, 1888 and that she was adopted by Joseph and Amanda La Badie on November 4, 1891.

² Foster, 125.
2) Marie C. Russ’ deposition that was taken on October 8, 1917 in front of Jess Henderson, Commissioner of Deeds in and for the City of New York, declared that Florence La Badie was her daughter who was adopted by Joseph and Amanda La Badie:

I, Mrs. Maria C. Russ of Home for Incurables, N.Y. City, N.Y. being duly sworn do depose and say that Florence Russ, my daughter, is an owner of lot No. 27537 in the Green-Wood Cemetery being a grandchild and heir at law of Mrs. Louisa Russ, the purchaser of said lot.

That some years ago said Florence Russ was legally adopted by Joseph E. and Amanda J. La Badie and her name legally changed to Florence La Badie.

That said Florence La Badie is now seriously ill and her remains will probably be interred in this lot.

Sworn to before me this 8th day of October, 1917.

3) Florence’s death certificate, signed on October 13, 1917 by Dr. Charles Sweet, indicates her birth date as April 27, 1888 and her birthplace as “NY”:
4) In a notarized deposition by Francis L. Russ, grandfather to Florence, dated Sept. 16, 1890, Florence Russ was stated to be three years old (assuming her birth date of April 27, 1888, this would have made Florence actually 2 ½ years old):
Her Career

Part of Florence’s youth was spent in Montreal where her adoptive father, Joseph E. LaBadie was a prominent attorney. Her adoptive mother, the former Amanda Victor, was born in Europe, possibly in Paris. Florence was educated in New York City schools and at the Convent of Notre Dame in Montreal. After her education was completed, she became a model for Penrhyn Stanlaws, one of America’s best known illustrators at the turn of the century.5

Florence LaBadie appeared on the stage beginning in 1908, when, after she registered with a theatrical booking company, she was signed by Chauncey Olcott’s company. She was on the road with Olcott in the autumn of that year, appearing as a scampering little fairy in Ragged Robin.6 She toured the East and on October 6, 1908 was seen at the Opera House in Lexington, Kentucky. In the autumn of 1910, she was before the footlights in a minor role in Winthrop Ames' presentation of The Blue Bird at the New Theatre in New York City.

In a 1914 interview, Florence recounted: “I posed for front covers of magazines before I went on the stage and afterward, between shows. That was what made me think I would fit into work for the screen. Mary Pickford is a dear friend of mine and it was Mary who suggested I try pictures.” 7

7 Sans Grease Paint and Wig,” By Mabel Condon, Motography, April 1914.
In 1909 Florence accompanied her friend Mary Pickford to the Biograph studio at 11 East 14th Street in Manhattan to watch her act in a film that was released the following September under the title Getting Even. Florence was given a bit part, and is credited as appearing in the March 1909 release of The Salvation Army Lass.\(^8\) A year later she joined Biograph as an employee.

After playing in over 30 Biograph one-reelers, often under the direction of D. W. Griffith, she moved to the Thanhouser Company in the late spring of 1911.\(^9\) While the film industry expanded and her colleagues raced from company to company in pursuit of escalating financial rewards, Florence remained with Thanhouser until her death in 1917. During those six years at Thanhouser, she grew to become Thanhouser’s most popular star, credited with appearing in at least 166 films.\(^10\) This included her most notable role as Florence Gray in Thanhouser’s 1914 highly successful serial production, The Million Dollar Mystery. In 1916 she appeared in eight Thanhouser feature films that were five- and six-reels in length. By 1917, she was unquestionably THE Thanhouser star – though the company itself, overshadowed by aggressive newcomers like Adolph Zukor and Lewis Selznick, was no longer an industry leader.

Her Accident and Death

While Florence was driving an automobile near Ossining, New York on Tuesday August 28, 1917, with her fiancé, Daniel Carson Goodman as a passenger, the brakes failed, after which the car plunged down a hill causing it to overturn at the bottom. While Goodman escaped with a broken leg and minor injuries, Florence was thrown from the vehicle and suffered a compound fracture of the pelvis. An account of the accident was published the following week in The Democratic Register\(^\text{11}\) (Note: Daniel Carson Goodman was erroneously reported as “Donnell Carson Goodman”):

\(^{11}\) The Democratic Register was a weekly newspaper published in Ossining, New York from 1868 until 1931; copies of articles used in this paper were obtained from the Ossining Historical Society Museum, http://ossininghistorical.org/wordpress/.
She was hospitalized in Ossining, under the care of Charles C. Sweet, M.D., of 13 Maple Street, who first attended her the day following the accident. Complications ensued, and her condition worsened. In anticipation of her death, The Democratic Register published a full account of her life and career on October 6, 1917:

Florence LaBadie, 29 years of age, died of blood poisoning (septicemia) at 1:35 p.m. on Saturday, October 13, 1917. Services were held at 11 o’clock the following Wednesday, at the Frank E. Campbell Funeral Home, 1970 Broadway (at 66th Street), New York City, with interment at Green-Wood Cemetery on the same day. Dozens of floral arrangements were received, and the crowd of mourners included numerous Thanhouser and Pathé players.
The Democratic Register obituary notice stated that she was survived by her adoptive father and mother, Joseph and Amanda La Badie, although this notice erroneously stated her place of birth:

Final verification of Florence’s age, place of birth, and date of death are contained in the burial order for her interment on October 17th at 1:00 pm in the Russ family plot at the Green-Wood Cemetery, purchased for her at age three by her Russ family.
The New York Times published an article the following day, Thursday October 18, 1917, reporting the throng of friends and fans attending her funeral:

Hearsay and Rumor: Setting the Record Straight

Foster’s story is based on a 1943 tale told to him by Valentine Grant, wife of Sydney Olcott, 26 years after La Badie’s death, which he relates in his book Stardust and Shadows: Canadians in Early Hollywood. Grant claimed that President Wilson was rumored to have been infatuated with La Badie since visiting the Thanhouser Studio when he was Governor of New Jersey, and in December of 1914 invited Florence to Washington DC for a Christmas celebration. Foster’s story continues that Florence reluctantly traveled with her mother to the White House at the insistence of the studio, specifically Edwin Thanhouser, and returned in January 1915 a “changed person.” Foster claims that Florence was impregnated by Wilson during this visit, and subsequently gave birth to Wilson’s illegitimate child in the fall of 1915. Foster goes on to state that Florence made “only four films in the first quarter of 1915 before requesting a six month leave of absence, which Thanhouser approved and announced in to the newspapers.” Foster goes on to assert that to cover up his affair with La Badie, government agents cut the brake lines on the car Florence was driving on August 28, 1917 resulting in the accident that eventually led to her death.

Numerous factual errors are presented in Foster’s chapter on Florence based on hearsay and rumor, lack of substantial research, and no documentation or verifiable resources; we address Foster’s key assertions as follows:

1) FOSTER CLAIM: “Florence La Badie was born in Montreal, Canada on April 14, 1893.”

   FACT: As documented in the first section of this paper, Florence La Badie was born in New York City on April 27, 1888 to Horace and Marie Russ.

12 Foster, 123 – 142.
13 Foster, 126.
2) FOSTER CLAIM: “Early in December, Florence and her mother, Helene [sic], received invitations to spend Christmas in Washington at the White House. Ed Thanhouser told them the invitation could not be turned down.”

FACT: Edwin Thanhouser was not living in the US in December 1914; he retired in November 1912 and was traveling in Europe and not present at the studio from December 1912 to February 1915. During this period, Charles Hite was president of the Thanhouser Film Corporation. Meanwhile, Woodrow Wilson spent Christmas 1914 at the White House with his family grieving over the loss of his wife Ellen who had died unexpectedly in August of Bright’s disease. A search of the Woodrow Wilson Papers held by the Library of Congress was conducted on August 17, 2015; no records were found documenting Florence or Amanda La Badie visiting the White House in December 1914 (see Appendix 1).

3) FOSTER CLAIM: “She only made four films in the first three months of the year [1915] before requesting a six-month leave of absence, which Thanhouser approved and was reported to the newspapers.”

FACT: Notice of Florence’s six-month leave of absence has not been found. Florence was consistently hard at work before the camera in 1915 making 23 movies that produced 51 reels of film, the period in which she was allegedly absent due to her pregnancy and the birth of Wilson’s child. (See Appendix 2). One film Crossed Wires (released June 29, 1915) survives and we clearly see Florence in full profile with no visible signs of pregnancy although she should have been well along at this point:

!Florence La Badie in Crossed Wires (June 29, 1915)

4) FOSTER CLAIM: As a result of the visit to Washington in December 1914, Foster states, “She was afraid of the President” and “...even a mention of Washington sent her into crying spells.”

14 Foster, 137.
16 Foster, 137.
17 Foster, 137.
FACT: Florence accompanied a contingent from the Thanhouser studio, including Edwin and Gertrude Thanhouser, to a banquet at the Biltmore Hotel on February 12, 1916 where they met President Wilson who gave a speech to assembled guest from the film industry. That Florence attended this event and met the president contradicts Foster’s claim of her emotional state regarding Wilson.

5) FOSTER CLAIM: In April 1916, “Thanhouser officially announced La Badie’s retirement.” “Nothing more was heard from her until April 1917, when the New York papers printed details of a car accident in which she was involved.”

FACT: No contemporary newspapers or trade magazines have been found that report Florence’s retirement as of April 1916, which would have been a significant story given her stature in the film industry. Furthermore, in 1916 she appeared for Thanhouser in eight feature films totaling 38 reels and in 1917 she appeared in five feature films totaling 26 reels. Her last film, The Man Without a Country was released on September 9, 1917 shortly after her automobile accident.

6) FOSTER CLAIM: “And who was the unknown man who leaped to safety from La Badie’s car just before it crashed?”

FACT: The other man in the accident was documented in newspaper reports as “Dr. Donnell [sic] Carson Goodman,” Florence’s fiancée. He could hardly have run away because he suffered a significant leg injury as a result of the car crash.

7) FOSTER CLAIM: Foster quotes James Baird, a junior reporter for the New York Telegraph aged seventeen at the time of La Badie’s death, as posing the final enigma: “Why would it take six months, until October, for her to die ‘from the after-effects of an April accident’ from which she had officially recovered?” he asked. “And how did she die? The death certificate said natural causes. At age twenty-four?”

FACT: Florence’s death certificate clearly indicates that she was 29 years old and gives the specific cause of death accurately as “septicemia [blood poisoning] due to compound fracture of the pelvis as result of accident.”

8) FOSTER CLAIM: Foster quotes Valentine Grant, “Newspaper friends in New York told us later that the funeral was a quite one, with only a few studio heads present, and with none of her contemporaries like Pickford or Lawrence attending.”

FACT: The New York Times on October 18, 1917 reported that there was a “throng” of film industry figures at the funeral with numerous floral tributes in evidence.

20 By this time the industry has shifted from one and two reel films to feature films that typically ran five reels or more.

9) FOSTER CLAIM: “James Baird, a junior reporter for the New York Telegraph, aged seventeen at the time of La Badie’s death and still living at the age of ninety-three in 1993, claimed that he had discovered shortly after the ‘accident’ that the break line on La Badie’s car had been cut through with a knife.”

FACT: No record for James Baird working for the New York Telegraph can be found. No published record can be found regarding cuts on the break lines on La Badie’s car.

10) FOSTER CLAIM: Foster goes on to quote Baird regarding La Badie and Wilson’s child, “I have tried for many years but have failed to discover what happened to George Woodrow Smith, for that was the name the baby was registered under.”

FACT: No birth certificate can be found on Ancestry.com for George Woodrow Smith in Washington, DC.

11) FOSTER CLAIM: “The plot in the Greenwood [sic] Cemetery was purchased jointly for Florence La Badie and her mother.”

FACT: Florence was buried in an unmarked grave site owned by her, purchased for her by the Russ family when she was age three. On April 27, 2014 on the 126th anniversary of her birth, a monument funded by her loyal fans was dedicated at the Green-Wood Cemetery.

SUMMARY

Proving something didn’t happen is an arduous task, in this case the accusations made by Charles Foster that Florence La Badie had an affair with Woodrow Wilson, bore his child, and the government was complicit in her death. We have documented facts that cast doubt upon Foster’s accusations as itemized in this paper. We ask that this paper be scrutinized for any oversights or misinterpretations, and brought to our attention. It has been our goal to seek out documentable facts (vs. hearsay and rumor) to set the record straight on the life, career, and death of the beautiful and talented Florence La Badie. We feel confident to claim there is nothing in the record that supports Foster’s claims in his book that Florence La Badie had an affair with President Woodrow Wilson, bore his illegitimate child, or that the automobile she was driving on August 28, 1917 was sabotaged by government agents. We hope this research will restore Florence’s reputation to the status she rightfully earned as one of America’s first true movie stars in the burgeoning motion picture industry, and the tragedy of her untimely death.

Appendix 1: Report from Jessica Kaplan, Research Associate, of Woodrow Wilson Papers held by the Library of Congress (August 17, 2015)

I began my research in the Entertainment files (Series 4, Executive Office Files, Reels #216-217). The documents basically consisted of letters from musicians and singers (and their friends and agents) who hoped to perform at the White House, not information regarding events or a visitor log. There was a December 2014 letter from Joseph Tumulty, Wilson's secretary, stating that there would be no performances at the White House during the winter of 1914-1915. The president was still in mourning over the loss of his wife. There wasn't anything about the La Badies. I read through Wilson's Appointment Books for Dec. 1914 (Series I, Diary and Diary Material, Reel #2). Wilson was at the White House during the month meeting regularly with cabinet members and legislators. He did not meet (formally) with any La Badie. I perused Receptions and Social Functions, March 1913-April 1915 (Series 10, Social Records, Reel #521). All official events at the White House were cancelled in the winter of 1914. Finally, I looked at Calling Cards, Invitations and Programs, Courtesy Cards on Reel #523 of Series 10 and came up empty.
